

TAGME is Changing to Meet Your Needs!

TAGME has certified graduate medical education professionals since 2005. During that time many changes have developed in GME, and in August at the Annual TAGME Board of Directors meeting, TAGME moved in a direction that will allow our GME community to keep pace with these changes. TAGME is confident this growth will keep us on a strong track for the future and to make certification more widely available.

While this growth is a multi-step process, please be assured your certification will continue through the date on your certificate, and professionals desiring certification in the upcoming year will be able to achieve that goal.

The first step in our growth involves restructuring the TAGME Certification process so that certification is available for more GME professionals. The most significant change is that in 2016 TAGME will provide a global assessment for certification. This means that specialties and subspecialties that have long desired certification, but did not have a sufficient number of GME professionals in their field to prepare tools for certification, will be eligible to become TAGME-certified.

During 2016, a task force of TAGME-certified professionals will develop specialty and subspecialty assessment processes that will allow specialty certification in addition to global GME certification beginning in 2017.
